

Oversight Systems Lends A Hand For MUST Ministries

Company makes time in busy schedule to help those in need

ATLANTA – August 31, 2009 – Oversight Systems continues its support of local charitable organizations. In conjunction with the company’s FY2010 kickoff meeting, Oversight employees joined together for a day of patching, priming and painting for Marietta, Georgia’s MUST Ministries Elizabeth Inn Emergency Shelter.

“In a time when companies are cutting back on their own workforces, with donations and contributions down, it’s enlightening to see a corporation take a day out of its schedule to help those in need,” noted John Moeller, MUST Ministries’ Executive Director. “I’m sure Oversight’s success has something to do with its employees’ drive if the work they did here is an indication of how much effort they put into their daily jobs.”

Oversight Systems has seen great success in the past year, doubling its revenues and number of employees. Volunteering to help the community, especially during these hard economic times for many, is a simple gift. “I am proud of the hard work and ingenuity ‘Team Oversight’ put together to get this project completed. We left the facility marked with a little paint and a clearer picture of what less-fortunate people are going through in this economy,” added Patrick Taylor, CEO and President of Oversight Systems. “The event inspired us to work even harder toward our goals in the coming year.”

MUST Ministries believes that people who find themselves homeless should have a place of refuge, a place to begin a journey of recovery. The faith-based organization is in their thirty-eighth year of providing services to individuals and families in crisis while helping them maintain their dignity.
